Helloooow from Montana ...

I guess that's a poor attempt at a "hoooooowl" but, forgive me, it was the best I could do and a little humane (no pun intended) indulgence is called for here.

I have lived with my master for about six weeks now and have settled in to a great life with a great friend. My master tells me that I live in a home where it is just as much my home as it is his. I like that, although I still refuse, like his former basset 'Jeb', to get him coffee even if he tells me no sugar or cream, just black to make it easy for me. HA! Who does he think he's kidding. As we all know, or should know, bassets never serve coffee. You'll never find "served coffee to my master" on any basset's résumé.

The 4 Season Sun Porch ...

My master designed a 4 season porch and construction may start in the next 3 months. The other day my master realized that there would be a door where I like to delight in sunning myself. So my master had a brilliant idea. I literally saw the light bulb above his head.

Anyway, my master decided to add a 4 foot wide by 6 feet long sun deck, where I like to sun, to the design. It even has steps to the yard. Wooooooow! [Sorry but I had to try again.] Now that's what I call consideration.

Having a sun porch built just for me. If I had butterflies, it would give me butterflies.

Doug the Dog ...

Doug the Dog, from the movie "UP," has recently been nominated by me for The Milk Bone of the Year for his splendid performance. This might be news to you but it is not news to me. And I love it when he says "Squirrel." My master says "Squirrel" and points while keeping his face and eyes fixed in the pointing direction. I hate to tell him that he's not as good as Doug and won't because my master is so sincere when he imitates Doug. You'd think he'd get the hint when I don't look in the direction he's pointing.

However, please note that the report is a periodic publication. I would like to write the report long hand but by pawmanship isn't very good. To tell you the truth, I'm out of practice, but that's another story.
